

Everest the Hard Way!

In 1988, Lexington native Ed Webster and three companions attempted to climb a new route up Mount Everest's massive 12,000-foot-high Kangshung or East Face. The four, in contrast to most expeditions, attempted it without bottled oxygen; without radios; and without Sherpas. Instead they relied on their own climbing skills, mountain experience, and friendship to take them to the summit of the world -- and on the adventure of a lifetime!
